

Do you have Rheumatoid Arthritis?

Are you starting treatment with a biologic or other new therapy?

You may be eligible to join a national research study called BSRBR-RA!

The BSRBR-RA is a national research study collecting information from patients with Rheumatoid Arthritis (RA) who are receiving biologic and other new therapies across the UK as part of their routine care. It is an observational study, where we simply watch what happens to you when your doctor prescribes your therapy (we are not a clinical trial). The data collected are used to assess the long-term safety and effectiveness of these treatments. The study has been running for over 15 years involving 25,000 participants to date. More information about our findings so far can be found on our website: www.bsrbr.org

If you are interested in participating in this study so that more can be found out about the long- term effects of medications such as Enbrel, Remicade, Humira, Remsima, Flixabi, Cimzia, RoActemra, Mabthera, Inflectra (and more treatments as they are approved for use in the UK market) please ask your rheumatology team at your next clinic appointment if you are eligible to be registered.

What you would need to do:

- Give your consent to be involved.
- Complete questionnaires regarding your health status every 6 months for at least three years.

If you have any questions about the study please contact the coordination team at the University of Manchester:

0161 275 1652/7390 / biologics.register@manchester.ac.uk

Or visit the study website:

<http://www.bsrbr.org/for-participants>

Thank you!

